Given the state of the world and the country these days, you can awaken one morning and find that when you turn on the faucets all you receive is a blast of air. Anything could have happened; hackers may have finally breached the computer systems that operate your community's water treatment plant.

The power grid may have collapsed causing treatment plants to shut down or in some cases, your city or town has simply run out of funds and cannot maintain the treatment facility, the list of possibilities is endless. Click the link below to see the full article
