How Safe Is Your Family? 9 Rules For Suburban Preppers

Categories : General Prepping

Wherever you live, prepping for disaster requires a lot of thought, time and effort. This is especially the case for suburban preppers. The two main issues suburban preppers have are - they live in close proximity with 1000s of other unprepared people and also, they simply don't have the space or land to be able to prepare effectively. Both of these issues can lead urban preppers to feel trapped in their environment.

If the SHTF, towns and cities will be chaos. Unprepared people will panic and do desperate, crazy things to survive. You need to be prepared for this and be able to think on your feet and adapt to unforeseen circumstances. Also it is imperative that you have a clear plan of actions should the worse happen. For example - are you staying put or getting out of town?

The 'Suburban Prepper' has written an excellent article about the 9 rules of urban preppers. It contains some excellent advice and vital information for urban preppers.

How Safe is Your Family? 9 Rules for Suburban Preppers

(Photo from: Eric Ward via Wikimedia Commons)