If It Crawls, It's Canned (An Awesome Article On Subsistence Living)

Categories: General Prepping, Homesteading, Hunting & Fishing, Self-Sufficiency, Wilderness Survival

Most of us get the majority of our food from the store; sure some of us grow and rear some of our food, but even then, a lot of our food still comes from the store, especially in the winter months. Below is a link to an awesome article about living on Prince of Wales Island in south-east Alaska. People living here have to survive largely as subsistence hunters and gatherers, and when food is plentiful, they have to can and preserve it in bulk for future use when food isn't so readily available.

This article is a great read for anyone into prepping, homesteading and living sustainably off-the-grid as it explains about subsistence hunting/gathering and also shows how vital canning and preserving foods is, when it is plentiful...

If It Crawls, It's Canned (An Awesome Article On Subsistence Living)

(Photo from: Alastair Bland/for NPR)