Square Foot Gardening... Vegetables Just Got a Whole Lot Easier.

Categories: General Prepping, Growing your Own, Self-Sufficiency

Did you know Mel Bartholomew, inventor of square foot gardening was not a horticulturist by trade, he was a civil engineer who sold his company and retired to his garden at the age of 42.
When Mel started gardening, conventional gardens were single row gardens, averaging a 20’x30’ ft. His very first disappointment was that tending this type of garden was really hard work. You tilled and dug and amended and weeded… and weeded, then weeded some more. It was just plain hard. So much work! all summer long. Clik the link below to see more about square foot gardening and help improve growing your vegetables this spring/summer

Square Foot Gardening... Vegetables Just Got a Whole Lot Easier