Why You Should Have A Passport Even If You're Not Planning A Trip (And instructions on how to get one)

Categories: General Prepping

Whether you are a serious prepper or just someone who's a little cautious about an uncertain future, getting a US (or the passport of your own country) is definitely something you should consider, EVEN if you have no intention of taking a trip any time soon.

If the SHTF (shit hits the fan!) and for whatever reason you decide you need to cross a border and leave the country, a passport could be vital. It could be the difference in getting across a border quickly and safely, or getting stuck in the riots, when people try and cross without passports. At the end of the day, when planning for the future, it's all about creating options and opportunities. Having a passport can give you both.

If this is something you hadn't considered and you would like to read more about this, check out the article below from Are We Crazy Or What? It also includes step by step information on how to get a US passport.
Why You Should Have A Passport Even If You're Not Planning A Trip

(Photo from: Are We Crazy Or What?)